Virginia is the place where enslaved Africans first landed and where American representative democracy was born.

Virginia is the place where emancipation began and the Confederate capitol was located.

Virginia is the place where schools were closed under Massive Resistance, rather than desegregate and allow Black children to attend, and it is the state that elected the nation’s first African American governor.

Virginia is a place of contradictions and complexity. We take a step forward and, often, a step back.

We have to acknowledge that. We have to teach that complexity to our children, and often to our adults. We are a state that for too long has told a false story of ourselves.

The story we tell is insufficient and inadequate, especially when it comes to Black history. We must remember that Black history IS American history.

That’s why I signed an executive directive to establish a Commission on African American History Education in the Commonwealth.

This Commission will review our educational standards, instructional practices, content, and resources currently used to teach African American history in the Commonwealth. We want to make sure all students develop a full and comprehensive understanding of the African-American voices that contribute to our story.

While we cannot change the past, we can use it and learn from it. When we know more, we can do more.

As we reckon with the painful legacy of Virginia’s racist past, and acknowledge that it continues to shape our present, we can and must continue to act to improve the future. We must work to tell our full and true story.

It is our job—all of us that make up this diverse society—to ensure that when the next generation looks back—a generation that is hopefully more inclusive than we have been—they see a more accurate narrative, one that tells the truth, and includes everyone.

Governor Ralph S. Northam
Old Point Comfort, August 24th, 2019
Commemoration of the First African Landing
I. Executive Summary

On August 24th, 2019 at Old Point Comfort, the site where the first enslaved Africans arrived on Virginia shores 400 years earlier, Governor Ralph Northam signed Executive Order Thirty Nine and announced the establishment of the Virginia African American History Education Commission. The Governor charged the Commission with thoroughly examining the Commonwealth’s K-12 curricula, professional development practices, and instructional supports to make recommendations for improving the way African American history is taught in Virginia schools. Governor Northam appointed a diverse, talented, and vibrant group of individuals to serve on this Commission including educators, historians, museum curators, school board members, faith leaders, school administrators, and citizens across the Commonwealth.

Executive Order Thirty Nine tasked the Commission with issuing a report no later than September 1, 2020, with recommendations including but not limited to:

1. Technical edits to and recommendations for enriched standards related to African American history;
2. Broader considerations for the full history and social studies standards review process; and
3. Necessary professional development and instructional supports for teachers to ensure culturally competent instruction

In this final report, the Commission offers extensive recommendations to ensure that content in Virginia schools is accurate, inclusive, and relatable, and to equip educators with the skills necessary to teach in a culturally responsive manner. When implemented, the Commission’s recommendations will enable all Virginia students to develop a comprehensive understanding of the African American voices that contribute to Virginia’s story.

Standards Recommendations

Even though Virginia led the nation in developing high quality content standards more than 25 years ago, the standards were tainted with a master narrative that marginalized or erased the presence of non-Europeans from the American landscape. These historical silences skew our perspective of the past, erasing people of color, and supplanting them with false narratives that ignore the diverse cultural underpinnings in American society.

While revised regularly by historians and experts, Virginia’s History and Social Studies Standards of Learning continue to be incomplete with regards to incorporating African American history into the larger narrative. Therefore, the Commission was tasked with making recommendations to ensure that the standards are more inclusive of African American history and provide opportunities for students to engage the content deeply, drawing connections to its relevance in our contemporary communities. The Standards Subcommittee therefore recommends the following:

- The State Superintendent for Public Instruction should approve technical edits to the Curriculum Framework for the following courses: Virginia Studies, United States History I and II, and Virginia and United States History. Any edits that fall outside the purview of technical adjustments should be considered during the regular standards review process by the Board of Education. All recommended edits can be found in Appendix D.
- The Board of Education ought to revise its standards review process and practice to be more inclusive of diverse perspectives. An updated review process chart can be found in Appendix E.
- The Board of Education should consider including 10 key concepts in its history and social studies standards to ensure that African American history is not taught separately, but is truly a cohesive part of the teaching of all history.
The Board of Education ought to approve the teaching of history as a requirement at all levels in K-12 to ensure that all of Virginia’s citizens are educated about the history of Virginia and the nation.

Professional Development Recommendations

Additionally, the Commission recognized that change in the delivery of content will only be successful if teachers and school leaders are appropriately supported and equipped to do so. The professional development subcommittee developed six key recommendations to ensure Virginia educators achieve proficiency in culturally relevant teaching and gain appropriate foundational knowledge in African American history. Their recommendations are to:

- Revise Virginia’s Teacher Evaluation Regulations and Virginia’s Uniform Performance standards for School Leaders to include cultural proficiency efficacy.
- Require every Virginia educator to certify that they have enrolled in Cultural Competency Professional Development by 2022.
- Allocate funding and personnel resources to develop and implement comprehensive professional development in the areas of cultural competency and African American History content for Virginia educators.
- Mandate certification (Continuing Education Units) in African American History for all holders of education licenses issued by the Virginia Department of Education (this includes initial licensure and renewals).
- Amend requirements for licensure endorsements in History/Social Science to require evidence of course study in African American History.
- Require a credit in African American History as a new requirement for graduation in Virginia. The new elective course in African American History developed by VDOE and WHRO could be used to fulfill this requirement.

Conclusion

The timing of the report reinforces the urgent and critical need we have as a society to better understand African American history and the ways in which our racial history continues to influence policies and systems today. The Commission wrote this final report in the midst of a global pandemic that disproportionately impacts communities of color. They worked against the backdrop of protests and outrage at the murder of George Floyd and too many other Black Americans in the name of law and order.

Understanding history imbues citizens with a deep and complex knowledge about their community and their nation. An effort to change the way citizens of Virginia are educated about history, with a special emphasis on incorporating African American history into the larger narrative, has never been more important. The Commission shares a strong sense of urgency for policymakers to act and implement the recommendations necessary to achieve a vision for a more just and inclusive Virginia.
II. About the Commission

Membership, Leadership, Organization and Support

Governor Northam appointed a diverse, talented, and vibrant group of individuals to serve on this Commission including educators, historians, museum curators, school board members, faith leaders, school administrators, teachers, and citizens across the Commonwealth. The Commission was chaired by Dr. Derrick Alridge, Professor of Education and Director of the Center for Race and Public Education in the South, Curry School of Education and Human Development, University of Virginia; Dr. Cassandra Newby-Alexander, Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Professor of History, Norfolk State University; and Dr. Rosa Atkins, Superintendent, Charlottesville City Schools. Dr. Alridge chaired the Professional Development Subcommittee; Dr. Newby-Alexander chaired the Standards Subcommittee and Dr. Atkins served as co-chair and Commission facilitator. Other key leadership included Virginia’s Secretary of Education Atif Qarni and Superintendent of Public Instruction Dr. James Lane.

A complete roster with titles and affiliations can be found in Appendix A.

In order to fulfill the charge of the Commission, the group was organized into two subcommittees, one focused on Standards Revisions, chaired by Dr. Newby-Alexander; and the other focused on Professional Development, chaired by Dr. Derrick Alridge. The Standards Subcommittee focused on reviewing Virginia’s history standards of learning, and the instructional practices, content, and resources currently used to teach African American history in the Commonwealth. At times, the Standards Subcommittee broke into smaller groups to work separately on technical edits, recommendations for the standards revision process, and examining the need for a comprehensive overhaul of the standards. Afterwards, the entire subcommittee reconvened and meticulously reviewed all edits, reaching a consensus on language and content. Meanwhile, the professional development subcommittee developed recommendations to better prepare Virginia teachers to teach African American history and apply culturally responsive pedagogical practices in their classrooms.

Staff from the Office of the Secretary of Education and Virginia Department of Education supported the Commission’s work and convened its meetings. Additionally, the Intercultural Development Research Association (IDRA) contributed its expertise in standards revision and professional development to the Commission, supporting the VDOE and Secretary’s staff by recording and transcribing meetings and listening sessions.

Meetings and Listening Sessions

The Commission began meeting in the fall of 2019, and met seven times over the course of the following year in different parts of the Commonwealth. In these meetings plenary presentations were made by local and national experts on a range of related topics. Additionally, the subcommittees met in small groups at each of these meetings to discuss, develop and draft their recommendations. All meetings were open to the public, and time was allocated for public comment at each meeting. This ensured that a wide variety of voices could be heard by Commission members. Verbal and written public comment was received from students, educators, families, advocacy groups, and citizens.

To view the written public comments submitted to the Commission, see the Commission’s Dropbox file.

A complete set of meeting agendas can be found in Appendix B.

The Commission also sought community input during a series of public listening sessions during the spring of 2020 as it examined how to best strengthen the Virginia history standards, and improve African American history education in classrooms across the Commonwealth. Approximately 300 people attended the first three listening sessions in Roanoke, Richmond, and Norfolk with panelists and members of the public alike providing robust public comment to Commission members at these events. Sessions in Danville and Woodbridge were cancelled due to COVID-19, and a survey was developed to obtain comment from those unable to attend a listening session.

A summary of these sessions can be found in Appendix C.

The Why & A Shared Vision

Why African American History? Why Now?

As Governor Northam said in his August 24th address, the history of African Americans in Virginia, and our nation, is difficult, complex and often untold. On the day Governor Northam established the Commission on African American History Education, Virginia honored the First African Landing, the 400th anniversary of the arrival of enslaved Africans on Virginia shores at Old Point Comfort. Only a few weeks earlier in Jamestown, white landowning men gathered to establish a system of representative government, our modern day democracy. That system did not represent the newly arrived Africans, who were forced from their homes and into a system of chattel slavery and systematic oppression. 400 years of American history later, Black people in Virginia endured not only decades of enslavement, but also Jim Crow terror and discrimination, Massive Resistance, and modern day iterations and remnants of government sanctioned Black oppression. Virginia has failed to fully represent African Americans in its history, contributing to a legacy of racism that has seeped into systems that impact every individual and every aspect of American life, including our classrooms.

Segregationist education policies codified into law and support of Massive Resistance in Virginia underscore the importance of this Commission’s work. Well before the landmark 1954 school desegregation case, Brown v. Board of Education, African American high school students led by Barbara Johns organized a student walkout at Robert Russa Moton High School in Farmville, Virginia, to protest its substandard conditions. While the Brown decision affirmed that Black students had a constitutional right to adequate schooling, there would be a struggle for equal access to a high quality education for years to come. It is this history that contextualizes the inequities leaders continue to work towards eradicating in Virginia’s public education system today; thus a robust understanding of this important history and its continuous influence on our communities today should be an essential component of the knowledge gained by every Virginia student.

The Governor’s creation of the Commission on African American History Education in Virginia provided an opportunity for the Commonwealth’s schools, educators, students, and families to reaffirm their commitment to breaking down these monumental inequities, and to tell a truer, better, and more honest Virginia story.

Shared Vision

As its members came together to embark in the process, the Commission identified a number of shared goals and vision for their work. The Commission’s vision for progress as it relates to the teaching of African American history and the cultivation of culturally responsive school buildings included:

- More inclusive standards. The Commission approached the work of improving African American history standards in the Commonwealth by first acknowledging that African American students have often been excluded from learning their own history. The group shared a broader goal of ensuring that African American history be in all classrooms 180 days a year, not just during Black History month or specific history courses. The Commission emphasized that educators should take an interdisciplinary approach and seek to represent diverse perspectives in all subject areas to enrich student education.
• Culturally responsive pedagogy. Early in its work, the Commission agreed that all students in the Commonwealth should be able to maximize their individual learning potential and engage in deeper learning. To ensure students can engage deeply in content, Virginia must empower educators to teach their students in ways that are relevant to their lives and experiences. The Commission embraced culturally responsive pedagogy because it recognizes the importance of students' cultural references in all aspects of learning and does not just reinforce the values of the dominant culture.

• Support for educators. Reinvigorating African American history in the Commonwealth cannot be changed without altering policy, practices, and teacher preparation. The Commission believes that every educator and school leader needs to be connected to this work and supported in meaningful ways. Additionally, successful culturally-responsive pedagogy requires educators to make changes in instructional techniques, materials, student-teacher relationships, classroom climate, and self-awareness. Educators must view all of their students through an asset-based lens and create learning communities where all heritages are valued. They must challenge stereotypes, prejudices, racism, and other forms of intolerance and oppression. This requires significant resources and supports over an extended period of time.

• Anti-racist school communities. As Virginia commits to cultivating more empathetic and anti-racist school communities, it is imperative we change school names and mascots that memorialize Confederate leaders or sympathizers. These school names and symbols have a traumatizing impact on students, families, teachers, and staff. As Governor Northam wrote in his July 6th letter to School Board Chairs, “When our public schools are named after individuals who advanced causes of slavery and systemic racism, and we allow those names to remain on school property, we tacitly endorse their values as our own. This is no longer acceptable.”

The shared goals of the Commission drove the conversation and development of recommendations by each of these subcommittee, as they charted pathways from the current realities to a bold vision for African American history education in the Commonwealth. These pathways are laid out in greater detail in the next two sections detailing the final recommendations.
III. Standards Subcommittee Recommendations

“When we look back at events of 1619, or 1861, or 1964, when the Civil Rights Act was signed, we often look at them as history—frozen in time or locked in a book, relics of the past. We memorize dates, but not connections. We don’t teach the themes that appear in our history over and over again. We often fail to draw the connecting lines from those past events to our present day. But to move forward, that is what we must do.”

- Governor Northam

The standards subcommittee, chaired by Dr. Cassandra Newby-Alexander, was tasked with three major objectives as it relates to Virginia’s History and Social Students standards. This included:

1) making recommendations for technical edits to the Virginia’s History and Social Science Standards of Learning (SOL);
2) identifying how the standards can be organized and improved to provide a more comprehensive picture of the African American story; and
3) how Virginia can improve the standards revisions process itself.

This section of the report reflects the Subcommittee’s work in those 3 areas, as well as additional background and context for Virginia’s standards and the process by which they are revised.

About Virginia’s History and Social Science Standards

The Commonwealth has long been known for its rigorous academic standards, including its history and social science standards of learning (SOL). First established in 1995, the standards of learning were created to raise and align the expectations for all students in public schools. The SOL establishes minimum expectations for the skills and knowledge a student should be able to demonstrate at the end of each grade or course. The standards fall under the purview of the Virginia Board of Education, which establishes a regular schedule for reviewing each SOL, typically once every 7 years. It is the responsibility of the Virginia Department of Education to facilitate the review process, gather input, and make recommendations to the Virginia Board of Education.

The Virginia Department of Education relies heavily on stakeholder input to create, revise and update the standards during the formal SOL review process. Since its inception the standards have been routinely updated based on feedback from practitioners, historians, community members, and stakeholders. The Standards Subcommittee of the Commission on African American History Education developed comprehensive recommendations and feedback for the consideration of the Virginia Department of Education and Virginia Board of Education during their regular review of the History and Social Studies standards which is scheduled to begin in early 2021.

Below is a summary of the work conducted by each workgroup, and the recommendations that emerged from their collaborative effort.

Technical Edits

Technical edits are made to inaccurate statements found in the Curriculum Framework with the final approval of the Superintendent of Public Instruction and communicated through a Superintendent’s Memo to school divisions.

The Technical Edits Workgroup reviewed every Standard of Learning in Virginia’s mandatory history and social studies courses to ensure that the content educators are teaching in our schools is accurate, inclusive, and relatable. They made detailed recommendations for edits, which are found in Appendix D. The workgroup recognizes that some of the edits may be beyond the scope of technical, and recommend any changes that cannot be immediately made by the State Superintendent be considered by the Board of Education in the regular review of the standards in 2021.

The Technical Edits Workgroup summarized the recommended changes as follows:

1. The elementary-level language was changed to make it more inclusive, covers diverse backgrounds, and highlights African American landmarks so that students can become acquainted with the importance of community history.
2. Important historical figures with diverse perspectives and contributions to the history and culture of Virginia and the United States were included throughout the curriculum so it is up to date and contains a range of African Americans to whom students can relate.
3. Terms and content relevant to African American history are introduced in earlier grades.
4. Information added and corrected in the U.S. history curriculum on the topics of slavery, the abolitionist movement, the Civil War, Reconstruction, lynching, and other important matters in African American history that had been omitted or distorted.

This range of strategies can best be illustrated by concrete examples of suggested edits in the curricular frameworks. The examples below are from the 11th grade curricular frameworks because they are the most detailed.

The existing standards explain the causes of the Civil War with the following sentences:

Cultural, economic, and constitutional differences between the North and the South eventually resulted in the Civil War.

Sectional tensions, originating with the formation of the nation, ultimately resulted in war between the Northern and Southern states.

The language above is passive, evasive, and circular. Below is the version with the subcommittee’s suggested technical edits incorporated:

Cultural, economic, and constitutional differences between the North and the South, all of them based in slavery, eventually resulted in the Civil War.

Sectional tensions over slavery, originating with the formation of the nation, ultimately resulted in war between the Northern and Southern states.

The sentences above are active, clear, and responsible. Throughout the standards, the subcommittee suggests altering the meaning of the frameworks by including Black people as active in their own and other’s history. For example, African Americans are not mentioned in the era of American Revolution; so the subcommittee suggests they are included, with special attention given to the efforts of thousands to become free by joining with the British.

These are a few examples of hundreds of proposed technical edits (see Appendix D) which correct the record by making it more complete, concrete, balanced, and active. If teachers can include these emphases, which are fundamental to American history but take no more class time than the standards as currently written, they can make their classes better for all students.

Standards Overhaul

In addition to examining the need for technical edits, the Standards Subcommittee had a workgroup that looked more cohesively at the standards as a whole. The standards overhaul group reviewed the organization of Virginia standards, and recommended changes for consideration by the Virginia Board of Education. They recommend changing the way history and social studies courses order their content, and encourage educators to teach content thematically so that students can more easily make connections and apply knowledge to their modern context. The standards overhaul work continually intersected with the technical edits group, and the two groups often met together to work collaboratively toward comprehensive recommendations.

Standards Overhaul Recommendations

- Develop a curriculum framework that addresses 10 key concepts that ensure African American history is not segregated from U.S. history in general. The concepts are:
  - Freedom – The absence of necessity, coercion, or constraint in choice or action
  - Imperialism and Nationalism
    - Imperialism - The extension or imposition of power, authority, or influence by one nation over another
    - Nationalism – A sense of national consciousness exalting one nation above all others and placing primary emphasis on promotion of its culture and interests as opposed to those of other nations or supranational groups
  - Colonialism – The policy or practice of acquiring full or partial political control over another country, occupying it with settlers, and exploiting it economically
  - Racism and Systemic Racism – Prejudice, discrimination, or antagonism directed against someone of a different race based on the belief that racial differences produce an inherent superiority of a particular race
  - Capitalism and Economic Motivation
    - Capitalism – An economic and political system motivated by profit and characterized by private or corporate ownership of capital goods, by investments that are determined by private decision, and by prices, production, and the distribution of goods that are determined mainly by competition in a free market
    - Economic Motivation – The degree to which an individual needs or is driven to gain money, things, or experiences for which a monetary value can be calculated.
  - Citizenship – The state of being conferred with the rights, obligations, privileges, and duties of a citizen
  - Servitude and Enslavement
    - Servitude – a condition in which one lacks liberty, especially to determine one's course of action or way of life, that includes compulsory service or labor
    - Enslavement – The forced process of positioning a person as the legal property of another and forcing them to continue forever
  - Advocacy and Agency
    - Advocacy – An activity by an individual or group that aims to influence decisions within political, economic, and social systems and institutions
    - Agency – The capacity of individuals to act independently and to make their own free choices
  - Cultural Expressionism – Those who value and convey their culture through the creation and expression of their culture through art, literature, music, linguistics, folkways, customs, cuisine, architecture, and economy.
  - Invasion and Colonization
    - Colonization – Bringing into subjection or subjugation, and implies the subjugation or pacification of a people, and taking of a pre-populated land
    - Invasion – when an army or country uses force to enter and take control of another country
- Revise or eliminate standards that are inaccurate or out of date.
- Secure funds for professional development to equip educators to teach to the new standards after they are implemented.

Process Revision

The process revision group reviewed the method by which the standards of learning and curriculum frameworks are updated to ensure a diverse range of stakeholder input is collected throughout the process. The group recommends expanding outreach to teachers and other external groups to allow for more voices from around the Commonwealth to contribute to development of the standards. They also propose adding a steering committee to provide the opportunity for collaboration between the content experts and the practitioners. Together, these steps allow for a wide range of perspectives to be heard, create space for incorporation of pedagogical recommendations, and ensure all content incorporated into the standards is historically accurate and inclusive.

Original Process to Modify Standards

The flow chart below demonstrates the current process by which the Standards of Learning and Curriculum Frameworks are modified.

The recommendations below document the group’s proposed changes to the process outlined above. These recommendations ensure the process is more inclusive by seeking out public comment and leadership from a diverse array of stakeholders.

Recommendations

- Convene a steering committee made up of historians, educators, and other individuals with content knowledge to review and revise the content recommended in the standards process.
- Provide outreach to encourage parents, students, educators, and administrators across the Commonwealth to give feedback on the proposed standards as part of the public comment process.
• Ensure that all comments, perspectives, events are thoroughly vetted and determine next steps on how to revise inaccurate content in the standards of learning and curriculum frameworks.
• Expand the external and educator groups so that a wide range of experiences, cultural perspectives, and pedagogical preferences are represented.
• Secure funds for expanding the educator and external committees.

A flow chart documenting the Process Revision group’s full recommendations can be found in Appendix F.

Conclusion

In order to truly change what and how African American history is taught in Virginia classrooms, modifications are necessary at a technical level, holistically to the set of standards spanning multiple grade levels,* and to the ways in which Virginia goes about revising the standards on a regular basis. The work and recommendations of the three Standards Subcommittee workgroups are intertwined and presented as a cohesive set of actions for policymakers to implement over time.
IV. Professional Development Subcommittee Report

“If we are going to begin to truly right the wrongs of our four centuries of history, if we are going to turn the light of truth upon them, we have to start with ourselves. For too long, the burden has been on individuals and communities of color to lead these discussions. But if more of us have these hard conversations, and truly listen and learn from them, we’ll be better able to shine that light of truth.”

-Governor Northam

The Professional Development Subcommittee, chaired by Dr. Derrick Alridge, focused their recommendations on the supports necessary for educators to:

1. Successfully implement the new Standards of Learning and Curriculum Frameworks once they are revised; and
2. To equip all educators in the Commonwealth to create and sustain culturally-responsive classrooms and pedagogy.

This section of the report reflects the Subcommittee’s recommendations in those two areas, as well as additional context on the current professional development landscape in Virginia.

The Need for Enhanced Professional Development in the Commonwealth

Professional Development is understood as a broad system of learning experiences that are meant to produce teacher effectiveness and improve the quality of schooling for all students. It is the intake of both formal and informal learning experiences that deepens and extends teachers’ professional competence, including knowledge, beliefs, motivation, and skills.

African American history should be taught throughout the entire year and across the curriculum. This requires a deep grounding in culturally responsive pedagogy, comprehensive content knowledge that paints a more complete historical picture, and an understanding of the contemporary ramifications of the past.

A study by the National Museum of African American History and Culture (NMAAHC) notes that teachers may not teach African American history comprehensively because they lack content knowledge, confidence, time, resources, and are concerned with students’ maturity levels for approaching difficult knowledge. As a result, teachers may largely ignore African American history or see it as supplementary. This often means that the history taught in our classrooms lacks complexity and does not include the Black experience as part of American history. In Virginia, teachers have been criticized for questionable activities meant to teach African American history and engage around difficult topics, such as through slave games and mock auctions. African American history is American history and cannot be separated from our collective story, but in order to teach without causing harm, educators must gain social and cultural awareness, content mastery, and discernment to teach this history in a holistic and humanizing way.

Most educators employed by the Commonwealth’s local school divisions have not taken a course or received professional development on teaching African American history or on culturally responsive pedagogy. In addition, 52% of students in Virginia are young people of color, while 82% of educators employed by the Commonwealth’s local school divisions are White. As a result, students of color are being educated by individuals who are not of their racial or cultural background. This issue, and our understanding of what it takes to adequately teach African American history, demonstrates a need for more robust professional development to equip the Commonwealth’s largely White educator workforce to engage in culturally responsive pedagogy that facilitates deeper learning opportunities and a sense of belonging for their students. Additionally, it indicates a need for greater training in content knowledge, as many educators may not have the knowledge necessary to present students with a full and comprehensive representation of the African American voices that contribute to Virginia’s story.

The recommendations outlined below are meant to equip public school teachers with the culturally proficient knowledge and resources to teach Virginia’s diverse learners and the specific content knowledge required to teach African American history sensitively and with confidence.

Defining Key Terms

- Anti-Racism: Anti-racism acknowledges that racist beliefs and structures are pervasive in all aspects of our lives and requires action to dismantle those beliefs and structures. This requires that school leaders hold educators and students accountable when they say and do things that make school unsafe, and that they dismantle systems perpetuating inequitable access to opportunity and outcomes for students historically marginalized by race.¹

- Culturally Relevant Pedagogy: Recognizes the importance of including students’ cultural references in all aspects of learning. Culturally relevant pedagogy must encompass the following three results: (1) must yield academic success for students; (2) must help students develop positive ethnic and cultural identities while simultaneously helping them achieve academically; and (3) must support students’ ability to recognize, understand, and critique current and social inequalities.²

- Culturally Relevant/Responsive Teaching: The behavioral expressions of knowledge, beliefs, and values that recognize the importance of racial and cultural diversity in learning. An approach that emphasizes using the cultural knowledge, prior experiences, frames of reference, and performance styles of ethnically diverse students to make learning encounters more relevant to and effective for them.³

- Cultural Competency: Having an awareness of one’s own cultural identity and views about difference, and the ability to learn and build on the varying cultural and community norms of students and their families. It is the ability to understand the within-group differences that make each student unique, while celebrating the between-group variations that make our country a tapestry. This understanding informs and expands teaching practices in the culturally competent educator’s classroom.⁴

- Cultural Proficiency: Recognized by environments that create opportunities for access, empowerment, and achievement by acknowledging, valuing, advocating, and empowering cultural diversity in all aspects of the educational process. This requires: (1) the acquisition of knowledge-based skills and understanding that are required to successfully teach and interact with students and to work effectively with colleagues from a variety of cultures by holding all forms of cultural difference in high esteem; (2) a continuing self-assessment of one’s values, beliefs and biases grounded in cultural humility; (3) an ongoing vigilance toward the dynamics of diversity, difference and power; and (4) the expansion of knowledge of cultural practices that recognize cultural bridges as going both ways.

Defining Culturally Responsive Practice for Virginia Educators

Establishing expectations for culturally responsive practice among Virginia’s educator workforce is critical to supporting the effective delivery of professional development. These expectations are framed into four quadrants that represent practices at the following critical levels: (1) culturally responsive schools, (2) culturally responsive leadership, (3) culturally responsive educators, and (4) culturally responsive pedagogy.

These four leverage points represent components of the educational ecosystem that can be transformed by culturally responsive practices to better serve students historically marginalized by race. Defining what culturally responsive practices look like in these four levels also aids in identifying data points, situating student outcomes through an equity lens supported by culturally responsive pedagogies, identifying capacity building needs, and creating spaces for continuous community input and support.

Culturally Responsive Schools

The culturally responsive school seeks the highest levels of achievement for all students by acknowledging, responding to, and truly integrating student, family, and community identity into all aspects of learning to foster a safe and equitable environment that recognizes the histories, struggles, achievements, and contributions of the racially marginalized populations it serves as fundamental to engaged student learning.

Culturally responsive schools address fundamental equity concerns by holding high expectations for students and providing the highest levels of support for all students to succeed. Success in a culturally responsive school is defined by preparation for college and career readiness in an environment that is supportive, is asset-conscious, and fosters positive cultural identity.

Culturally Responsive Leadership

Culturally responsive school leaders create school contexts and curriculum that responds effectively to the educational, social, political, and cultural needs of students through policy creation, expectation setting and monitoring, and staff coaching to facilitate successful implementation of culturally responsive instruction.

This leader also sets standards and expectations for high academic success regardless of perceived performance abilities. This means that the campus leader creates an inclusive school environment in which a climate free from implicit biases toward racial and ethnic groups exists. This leader also centers marginalized families and communities as important in decision making and solution-seeking. These

| Promote respect for student differences. | Affirms cultural and individual identity. |
| Recognize and redress bias in the system. | Uses cultural differences as assets necessary to inform the development of instructional resources. |
| Challenge stereotypes, prejudices, racism, and other forms of intolerance, and oppression. | Mediates power imbalances based on race, culture, ethnicity, and class. |
| Are change agents for social justice and academic equity. | Utilize students' culture as a vehicle for learning. |
| Cultivate relationships beyond the classroom anchored in affirmation, mutual respect and validation. | Establishes high expectations for all students and provides support to ensure success. |
| Engage in reflection of their beliefs, behaviors and practices. | Diverse groups from all rings of culture are represented, validated, and affirmed. |
| Communicate in linguistically and culturally responsive ways. | Establishes a 3-pronged approach: institutional, personal, and instructional. |

- Institutional: recognizes a need for reform of school policies and procedures based on cultural factors.
- Personal: requires teachers to become culturally responsive.
- Instructional: provides educational materials that are culturally affirming and aid in delivering culturally responsive instruction.
leaders are courageous in challenging aspects of teaching and learning that marginalize students of color, and identify, protect, institutionalize, and celebrate all cultural practices from these students.

Culturally Responsive Educators

Culture strongly influences the attitudes, values, and behaviors that students and teachers bring to the instructional process, making culturally responsive educators necessary for the equitable achievement of today's increasingly diverse student population. Culturally responsive educators see the diversity in their classrooms as an asset and use their knowledge on students' backgrounds to enrich educational experiences. These teachers form a thorough understanding of the specific cultures of the students they teach, how that culture affects student learning behaviors, and how they can change classroom interactions and instruction to embrace the differences.

Culturally responsive educators:
- Reflect on their own cultural lens
- Model high expectations for all students
- Draw on students’ culture to shape curriculum and instruction
- Promote respect for student differences
- Recognize and redress bias in the system
- Bring real-world issues into the classroom
- Communicate in linguistically and culturally responsive ways
- Collaborate with families and the local community

Culturally Responsive Pedagogy

Culturally responsive pedagogy is characterized by using the cultural characteristics, experiences, and perspectives of ethnically diverse students as conduits for teaching them more effectively. It encompasses teaching practices that highlight the values, traditions, language, and histories that make each student and community unique and different from the teacher.

As the diversity in schools continues to grow, this instructional theory places an emphasis on creating a school environment in which all are affirmed for the beauty in their respective languages, beliefs, and ideas and in which students' best interest is centered.

Culturally responsive pedagogy comprises three functional dimensions: (1) institutional, (2) personal, and (3) instructional. The institutional dimension of culturally responsive pedagogy emphasizes the need for reform of the cultural factors affecting the organization of schools, school policies and procedures (including allocation of funds and resources), and community involvement. It reflects the administration, its policies, and values. The personal dimension refers to the process by which teachers learn to become culturally responsive. It includes both cognitive and emotional processes. The instructional dimension refers to practices and challenges associated with implementing cultural responsiveness in the classroom. It includes materials, strategies, and activities that form the basis of

All three dimensions significantly interact in the teaching and learning process and are critical to understanding the effectiveness of culturally responsive pedagogy.⁸

Recommendations

Legislative

- Revise Virginia’s Teacher Evaluation Regulations and Virginia’s Uniform Performance standards for School Leaders to include cultural proficiency efficacy.
- Require every Virginia educator to certify that they have enrolled in Cultural Competency Professional Development by 2022.
- Allocate funding and personnel resources to develop and implement comprehensive professional development in the areas of cultural competency and African American History content for Virginia educators.
- Mandate certification (Continuing Education Units) in African American History for all holders of education licenses issued by the Virginia Department of Education (this includes initial licensure and renewals).
- Amend requirements for licensure endorsements in History/Social Science to require evidence of course study in African American History.
- Require a credit in African American History as a new requirement for graduation in Virginia. The new elective course in African American History developed by VDOE and WHRO could be used to fulfill this requirement.

General

- Broaden the teaching pipeline to seek out and train diverse teachers.
- Incentivize universities and colleges to offer courses and professional development on Black history, teaching Black history, and cultural competency for teachers. Courses and professional development should be for secondary and elementary teachers and librarians.
- Encourage universities and colleges in Virginia to offer certificates in African American history and/or African American Studies for teachers and prospective teachers.
- Enhance Virginia’s School Climate Survey to include evaluation of Culturally Responsive School Climate and report these outcomes on Virginia’s School Quality Profiles.
- Establish common language between education preparation programs and school divisions that promote equity and inclusivity.
- Develop models for training about implicit bias and culturally-responsive pedagogy.
- Make family and community engagement a guiding principle in teacher preparation.
- Create a database of resources for educators.
- Ensure that training components include K-8 educators.
- Provide content in multiple modes to improve teacher access.
- Evaluate what teaching resources and textbooks need to be retired.
- Partner with historical and cultural organizations versed in culturally-responsive pedagogy and African American history.
- Develop a model anti-racism educator policy approved by the Virginia Board of Education.
- School Divisions review inclusion of Culturally Responsive Teaching and Culturally Responsive Practices as part of division strategic plans.

School boards include culturally responsive awareness as part of the school board’s professional development and training.

Develop guidelines for Culturally Responsive Teaching and Culturally Responsive Practice in Virginia. These guidelines should be informed by the profiles developed by the Commission and developed in consultation with a list of experts and researchers recommended by the Subcommittee in Appendix F.

Establish minimum criteria for state approved professional development in the following areas:
- Culturally Relevant Teaching: Acquisition of curriculum and pedagogical knowledge
- Cultural Proficiency: Mastery of knowledge
- Culturally Responsive Teaching: Application of knowledge
- Anti-Racist Education: Strategies
- African American History: Content and Pedagogy

Considerations for Implementation
- Include family and community engagement through an equity lens in teacher preparation curriculum.
- Ensure educators have access to multiple delivery systems in order to provide equitable access to professional development opportunities.
- Prioritize deployment of cultural competency professional development to divisions demonstrating the highest needs based on student outcome data (i.e. rates of discipline disproportionality, teachers’ diversity, academic achievement gaps, and graduation disparities - including diploma types).

Conclusion
Culturally-responsive pedagogy and curricula are needed more now than ever. Students in Virginia and across the country are interested in learning about African American history in order to better understand the history of the United States. Many teachers are eager to gain robust and accurate content knowledge in Black history in order to more effectively teach both Black history and U.S. history. If implemented comprehensively, these recommendations will ultimately equip educators to provide all students in the Commonwealth with opportunities to learn in ways that are relevant to their lived experiences and create cultures of inclusivity and belonging in Virginia schools.
V. Conclusion

Over the course of the last year, the African American History Education Commission established a clear, bold vision for improving African American history education and fostering culturally responsive classrooms throughout the Commonwealth. Accomplishing this vision will require changing Virginia’s history and social studies standards, both in the short and long term; improving how those standards are regularly revised, making significant investments in professional development for teachers, and sustaining resources and supports for culturally responsive classrooms.

The Commission is issuing this report within the context of dramatic social upheaval. Our nation is in the throes of an unprecedented pandemic that is disproportionately impacting Black and Latino communities and illuminating devastating racial health disparities in our country. Additionally, the murder of George Floyd has catalyzed robust conversations about police brutality and racism in our society. Citizens all over the country have protested and called upon governments and leaders to take bold action against police brutality and other forms of structural racism in our communities. These events and public discourse clearly reinforce the dire need for all Virginians, and all Americans, to better and more deeply understand America’s difficult and complex racial history, its racists footings, and the continuous influence that history has on our society today.

It is now incumbent upon policy makers to implement these recommendations, prioritize the investment, and take bold action to ensure all students graduate from Virginia’s public schools with a deep, thorough, and accurate understanding of African American history in the Commonwealth and our nation. The Commission calls on the Executive Branch, the General Assembly, the Board of Education, local school divisions, and institutions of higher education to drive these changes at every level. These changes are critical for Virginia’s students and we must act now to build an education system that confronts these realities and equips students to lead Virginia and the nation into a more just and inclusive era.

Listening Sessions Executive Summary

As part of the Commission’s purpose and process, the Commission conducted three public listening sessions to gain information and perspectives from a wide variety of educational stakeholders from panels of parents and community advocates, educators and students who graduated from Virginia’s public schools. The end of each session was open to the public for comment, and those who were unwilling or unable to deliver their comments directly to the Commission were invited to submit them in writing online.

Public listening sessions dates:

- February 11, 2020: Harrison Museum of African American Culture
- February 12, 2020: Black History Museum and Cultural Center of Virginia
- March 11, 2020: Norfolk State University

Panel Discussions

Many of the same questions were asked to all three panels to allow them to share their unique perspectives on African American history education in Virginia. Questions included the following.

How have you personally been affected by how African American history is taught?

- Educator Panel: The lack of nuance or deep content in African American history left their students feeling disconnected and uninterested in learning history. The focus on slavery lent a “sense of shame” to African Americans that intensified student disengagement.

- Parent and Community Stakeholder Panel: Panelists’ own experiences learning African American history happened outside of the classroom because it was not really taught to them. One of the parents spoke of making special efforts to teach her children and grandchildren African American history to give them a sense of self that they could not get from history education at school.

- Student Panel: The students agreed that they learned very little about African American history beyond a few historical figures and the topics of slavery, the Black renaissance, and the civil rights movement. It led to a definite disconnect from history and their peers.

What considerations should be made to change the way African American history is taught?

- Educator Panel: History should come alive to students and show multiple perspectives.

- Parent and Community Stakeholder Panel: History content should be multicultural and touch on local history to make it more relevant to all students. African American history should not begin with slavery but by exploring African cultures and how their traditions have impacted the United States. Historical figures should be drawn from a variety of fields to show the vast scope of African American excellence.

- Student Panel: Teachers should be prepared with the knowledge and skills to teach and facilitate conversation on the nuanced, complex story of African American contributions to U.S. history. African American history should not only focus on slavery but provide a fuller, more inclusive narrative.

How can we make sure that teachers are adequately prepared to teach African American history?

- Educator Panel: Attract more African American teachers to the field. The current demographics of teachers require intensive professional development and work to overcome implicit biases to give the full picture of African American history. They should have strong content knowledge in African American history. Additionally, the emphasis on high-stakes testing should be lessened to allow teachers the ability to focus on engaging their students with historical content.

- Parent and Community Stakeholder Panel: More teachers of color should be recruited, and education programs should be reformed at the university level to increase cultural competency. Existing teachers should receive professional development with lessons learned from educators who already show great competence in African American history.
• Student Panel: Ensure that all teachers are credentialed for African American history and reiterate that the only way to honestly address U.S. history is to discuss the darker, violent aspects. They need to be sure they are emotionally prepared and have the strategies to discuss these difficult topics with their students.

What can be done to improve African American history education?

• Educator Panel: This panel received more pointed questions about educators, but the overall theme of how the educator workforce could be better prepared to engage their students with African American history hinged on recruiting more African American teachers at all grade levels. Additionally, the commonwealth of Virginia should reconsider how history is taught to allow for more student collaboration and engagement.

• Parent and Community Stakeholder Panel: African American historical content should be taught at all grade levels and community aspects of African American history, positive and negative, should be addressed so all students feel connected to history.

• Student Panel: Diversification is important. Students learn in different ways, so history education should be well-rounded. It should also not only focus on the past, but the present and implications for the future. History has depth, and students should feel its importance in everything that they do as they learn and grow as individuals.

Public Comment

Each listening session set aside time for public comments. Speakers were given three minutes to speak and their thoughtful comments often sparked conversation among the Commission and panel members present. Important points touched upon by one or multiple members of the public included the following.

• Virginia must remove the barriers that keep qualified African American teachers out of the classroom and address implicit biases to allow for white teachers currently in the classroom to be comfortable having difficult discussions about history.

• Historical content should be factual and no longer omit important details about the contributions of African Americans in building the United States. Historical content should be a major focus in school and reverse the course of increasing other disciplines in the name of improving test scores.

• African American history in the classroom should begin with African American historical and cultural influences worldwide, not with slavery. Any discussion of slavery in the classroom should not center on economics; educators must be prepared for the difficult conversations that come with addressing the horrors of slavery.

• Students should be encouraged to reach out to their communities to learn about how national history intersects with local and cultural history.

• Part of the discussion of African American history should explore why it has not been taught so that students and teachers can actively situate it in United States and world history. Making African American history an elective will not solve the issue; it must be taught as part of regular historical curriculum using a multidisciplinary approach.

Welcome and Overview

Anita James Price welcomed the Commission and public attendees on behalf of the Harrison Museum of African American Culture. Gloria Randolph-King then welcomed everyone on behalf of Governor Ralph Northam and the entire Commission.

Virginia’s Secretary of Education, Atif Qarni, briefly explained the Commission’s duty to look at the state’s history standards and find ways to make them more inclusive of African American history in its proper place as part of U.S. history. He also spoke to the duty of education stakeholders to embrace cultural diversity and revisit how they are teaching history and asking students to demonstrate what they learn – moving from answering multiple choice questions to making complex connections between important modern and historical figures.

Leah Walker, the Virginia Department of Education’s Director of Equity and Community Engagement, gave a broader overview of the Commission’s structure and charge. They are charged with evaluating the current educational landscape of Virginia’s African American history and making key recommendations for improvement. The Commission is not charged with making changes directly but to highlight the best possible recommendations to provide a comprehensive vision for policymakers.

It is made up of two committees. The professional development committee will address how to recruit and help teachers provide culturally-competent and accurate African American history. The standards committee is divided into three subcommittees that will recommend necessary technical edits to be made to the current standards, recommendations on standards reform, and how to improve the process of standards revision itself.

The purpose of the listening sessions is to gain information and perspectives from a wide variety of education stakeholders to be shared with the full Commission. Speaking at the listening sessions is not the only way for the public to comment, individuals may also submit written remarks on the AAHEC website.

Educator Panel

Gloria Randolph-King moderated the panel discussion. Panel members included:

- Dave Dickinson, social studies supervisor, Montgomery County
- Judy Diggs, Director of Equity, Montgomery County Schools
- Jeff Girvan, supervisor of history and social science from Prince William County
- Adam Gray, teacher, Forest Park Academy, Roanoke County Public Schools
- Derek Hairston, teacher at Christiansburg High School, Montgomery County
- Chris Ingle, history, social studies, and government teacher, William Fleming High School
Sharon Jennings, special education teacher from Salem High School, Salem City Schools
Andrea Johnson, 12th grade English teacher and department chair at Salem High School, Salem City Schools
Sonnya Preston, business and information technology teacher from Salem City Schools

The panel consisted of key questions to prompt discussion about the unique experiences and challenges educators have faced in Virginia’s public schools as they relate to African American history.

How have you been personally affected by the way African American history is taught?

- Mr. Dickinson observed that he saw firsthand how the history he taught was uninteresting to his students because it was not relevant to them. Ms. Diggs added that there was an element of shame when it came to learning African American history because it was all about slavery. Ms. Preston was drastically impacted by the teaching of African American history as the only African American in her classes, where she felt like her people were being described as savages or criminals. It is important for students to know that African American history started before slavery.

What do you think must be considered with the changes we are trying to make to Virginia’s history standards and the way it is taught?

- Mr. Girvan suggested that history should not be relegated to facts and dates but should come alive for students and open up to multiple perspectives. There are numerous ways to look at history and these unique perspectives are relevant to current events.

What would you identify as the biggest challenge for preparing teachers to teach African American history?

- Ms. Preston stressed the fact that teachers need to have strong content knowledge and cultural awareness of African American history, which will require changing the historical narrative.
- Ms. Johnson identified the importance of in-depth professional development, especially considering that most teachers are white women. Mr. Hairston agreed and added that students also should be encouraged to read and use primary sources.
- Ms. Diggs identified the need for teachers to be culturally competent as a challenge to overcome and the need for constantly reflection of their own cultures and internal biases and how they impact their work in the classroom.
- Mr. Ingle suggested lessening the focus on high-stakes Standards of Learning (SOL) testing, because teaching for the test constrains the content a teacher can use and how they can teach.

Identify current teaching strategies that are being used or could be improved upon.

- Mr. Ingle suggested project-based learning, community activities and interdisciplinary teaching. Mr. Gray highlighted the fact that the way history is taught needs to change. In his own classroom, he teaches history regionally, not chronologically. Education departments in colleges and universities need to prepare teachers to be able to handle multicultural, diverse classrooms.

What can be done to help teachers develop their ability to deliver and make students aware of African American history?

- Mr. Dickenson mentioned that there is a VDOE African American history elective being developed in Virginia and that other states’ responses have ranged from electives to required courses.
- Ms. Preston stressed the importance of recruiting and retaining African American teachers, especially at the elementary level so that, from the start of their educational journey, African American students feel represented and have a teacher they can feel comfortable approaching.

What kinds of supports would white teachers need to teach African American history?

- Ms. Jennings stressed equity as a major component of helping white teachers gain the capacity to properly teach African American history and engage with all their students. Mr. Girvan added that white teachers may find the content of African American history uncomfortable and so may go past it quickly or explain it poorly.

How can the Commission help provide services for teachers?
• Ms. Preston suggested pointing out resources and African American history experts to provide advice and be invited to speak directly to their classes on important topics.

How will staff and educators react to implementation of African American history content?
• Mr. Dickinson drew from his own experience that most will treat it positively, but that there are always holdouts resistant to change. Mr. Ingle added that, as long as history departments receive proper support, they will welcome the changes.
• Mr. Girvan emphasized that the content is not the only major change that is necessary. The way history is taught and learned needs to move away from strict memorization, or students will just be memorizing different material rather than engaging with it. The richness of historical content should be interdisciplinary.

For educators, to what extent are the shortcomings of African American history associated with shortcomings in the demographics of the educator workforce? How has a predominately white teacher workforce impacted Virginia’s schools?
• Ms. Jennings highlighted her own experience as one of two African Americans at her high school and reiterated that districts need to take the first step and go to HBCUs to recruit more African American teachers. They should find people whose experiences and skills can help them really connect with their students.
• Regarding the current demographic impact, Mr. Gray noted that the lack of African American teachers on staff at his own school, which is primarily attended by African American students, is apparent but that all teachers need to be better equipped to engage all of their students and know the unique ways students learn now.
• Ms. Preston takes advantage of the fact that she may be the first African American teachers her students have had and tries to work in African American history into conversations she has with her students. She tries to take every opportunity to lift up her African American students and broaden their knowledge.

How do you feel about the Commission’s task to revise the SOLs?
• Mr. Dickinson responded that it is a challenging task, especially because education still needs to be in line with standardized testing. Mr. Girvan agreed and added that the Commission’s work should not only result in an elective course. Ms. Jennings emphasized that the class should be part of a history requirement so that it can thrive, and students can benefit from African American history content.

Ms. Walked provided closing comments to the listening session thanking the panel for their insights and comments and clarified that the African American history elective will be fully online and marks just a starting point to improve African American history in Virginia.

Public Comment

The public comments section included attendees submitting their comments by number, with three minutes to speak. Comments also were welcomed to be submitted online in their entirety. Briefly, the recorded comments included the following.

• The first person to speak, Andre Tucker, commented on the Commission’s task to revise and improve African American history in Virginia. He said that the state itself must address the barriers to keep African American history graduates like himself out of the classroom. He stated that many teachers of color are receiving misinformation about Praxis types and scores or are simply not passing the test. Competent African American history teachers should not be kept from the occupation simply because of a bad test or a lack of information how to take their next steps.
• Brenda Muse, Director of Instruction for the Franklin County Public School System, began her comments by informing the Commission that Franklin County Public Schools provides all teachers with cultural competency and responsiveness training. Improving on history in the classrooms means telling stories and connecting them to the stories and issues that students face today. Students need to know how Black Americans helped build this country.
• Judy Ayyildiz commented that, in her time as a teacher, she learned that you cannot teach history in a vacuum, and that history content needs to stop promoting lies or mistruths about the treatment of African Americans and excluding their many contributions.
• Julie Markovitz thanked the Commission for their work as a white woman and mother of three Black students. She emphasized a need for professional development for white women and teachers about how to talk about race and African American history to reduce the desire to avoid the topic.

• The next speaker was a school counselor whose experiences in other states gave unique insight into Virginia’s demographics and education. Educators will need to start from scratch in the sense of fully grasping the importance of African American history and the ramifications of honestly teaching it to students.

• Rebecca Smith, an elementary school principal from Pulaski, Virginia, noted that much of Virginia’s African American history is hidden and not discussed in the classroom. This must change because African American history is U.S. history.

• Amanda Wright, an academic coach in Salem, suggested that the state begin to move away from standardized testing and toward portfolio assessments to get a better idea of student learning.

• Jordan Bell, who works with the afterschool Boys and Girls Club associated with Garden City Elementary in Roanoke, stressed that when speaking about African American history, you should begin with historical and cultural influences worldwide, not with slavery. She implemented a local curriculum with her students by going out and getting stories from the community, which has positively impacted their learning.

• Anita James-Price bookended Jordan Bell’s comment by emphasizing that history should not only be relevant, but people should be aware of how it impacts every facet of our lives. She touched on historical figures and landmarks relevant to African American history in Roanoke.

• Lisa Pemix, parent and former teacher, shared her experiences with thematic learning and how it can serve as a framing device to connect history and other disciplines.

• Peggy Davis invited attendees to visit the Botetourt County History Museum, especially because it can provide helpful content for teachers to incorporate African American history into their lessons.

• Brian Edwards emphasized that African American history should not start off with slavery. There is much more content that must be shared.

• Melissa May, admissions directory for a community high school, shared her frustrations with trying to publicize events related to Martin Luther King, Jr. Day and the importance of listening to voices that have traditionally been unheard.

• The final public speaker thanked the Commission for their work and shared their personal history. They have a unique perspective, being from Kenya, and have found that African American history in the United States has been kept from African Americans.

Ms. Price concluded by thanking all attendees and reminding people that there will be other listening sessions and more opportunities for people to provide recommendations to inform the Commission’s work.
Adele Johnson, executive director of the Black History and Cultural Center of Virginia, welcomed attendees to the listening session on behalf of the center. Their job at the museum is to share stories that inspire and tell the untold narratives of African American history in Virginia. She invited the public to visit the Monticello exhibit currently showcased that tells its story from the point of view of the enslaved.

Dr. Derrick Alridge, co-chair of the African American History Education Commission and Director for the Center for Race and Public Education in the South at the University of Virginia, served as moderator for the panel discussion. He thanked attendees on behalf of the Commission and commented on the significance of starting the public listening sessions during Black History Month and at important sites like the Black History and Cultural Center of Virginia.

Dr. James Lane, Virginia’s 25th Superintendent of Public Instruction, explained that Governor Ralph Northam established the Commission to ensure that Virginia’s untold story of African American history is brought to the forefront and taught to its students. As part of its work to improve education, the Department of Education welcomes public feedback to know how it can do a better job of altering standards and changing content to be more accurate and equitable.

Secretary of Education Atif Qarni brought greetings from the governor and spoke of the Commission’s task as an opportunity for Virginia to reimagine and rethink the way that it presents and teaches history. His own work in education across the state has highlighted the inequities inherent in the present system. Even though the Commission is made up of experts in history, equity and education, the listening sessions are a vital component that enables them to receive feedback and advice from educational stakeholders who are directly impacted by the standards.

Leah Walker provided a brief overview of the Commission’s charge to make suggestions and technical edits to Virginia’s history standards and provide recommendations for culturally competent professional developments so that teachers may be prepared to teach African American history. Their duty is to look at short-term improvements and long-term changes to how Virginia’s schools approach and teach history. The Commonwealth’s Department of Education was also charged with making an elective course in African American history to be released by the fall semester of 2020.

The panel began with introductions. Attendees included:
• Evlatrice Belsches, public historian and author
• Chantel Brown, parent of a child at Glen Allen Elementary School
• Zyahna Bryant, first year undergraduate at the University of Virginia and member of the Virginia African American Advisory Board
• Joshua Cole, VCU School of Education and the Office of Strategic Engagement
• Toria Edmunds-Howell, former educator from Richmond Public Schools, the RPS Education Foundation, and the City of Richmond Mayor’s Youth Academy
• Pat Foster, director of Minority Business Development for the City of Richmond
• Jer’Mykeal McCoy, president of the Urban League of Greater Richmond Young Professionals
• Sean Miller, county chief operating officer, Boys and Girls Clubs of Metro Richmond
• Kimberly Morris, parent of an 11th grader at Henrico High School
• Sonji Rollins-Tucker, parent and grandparent
• Bill Wooldridge, juvenile community programs manager for the City of Richmond

Derrick Alridge moderated the panel and facilitated the following discussions.

How have you been personally affected by the way African American history is or isn’t taught?

• Mr. McCoy touched on his own experience in Virginia’s schools when he was the only person in his classes who knew about African American history and culture because he sought it out on his own, outside of the classroom.
• Ms. Howell realized when she went to college and received a more intensive history education that she had not learned African American history during her time in public school. Learning at an HBCU broadened her horizons and made her feel like she began to understand her space in the world and had a sense of belonging with dedicated African American scholars. Ms. Morris had a similar experience and only realized she had not been taught African American history beyond the basics until she pursued higher education.
• Ms. Tucker reflected on her time in public school and how the way she was taught African American history undermined her confidence and made her feel like she did not belong. As a mother and grandmother, she has taken it upon herself to help her children and grandchildren experience history firsthand through learning and visiting historical sites. Allowing African American students to really engage in their history and to lift up their stories and accomplishments will build confidence and a positive identity in students.

If we reflect on what is being taught now in school, particularly in relation to when and how African American history is taught, what should we revise and what might we reconsider?

• Mr. Woolridge specifically referenced the Standards of Learning (SOL) and suggested that African American history content should begin in the third grade when the SOLs begin. Parent engagement also is key for student support.
• Ms. Belsches suggested expanding the historical narrative to include events and people relevant to Virginia’s communities. Storytelling will help expand the narrative and deepen student learning. Rich, historical content should be provided to teachers so that they can be sure to have excellent sources to draw from in their lessons.
• Ms. Foster suggested learning about the robust history of African Americans and their cultures rather than just starting with slavery that marked African Americans being brought to America.
• Ms. Bryant emphasized Black excellence and drawing from role models from a variety of fields to show the broad range of accomplishments made by Black scholars.
• Mr. Miller added that changing African American history will require changing the historical narrative taught in the Commonwealth’s schools.

How can we ensure that teachers are adequately prepared to teach African American history to diverse student populations?

• Mr. Cole emphasized that the Commissions’ work provides an opportunity to help teachers become culturally competent, starting at reforming education programs at the university level to training established educators. He also suggested finding teachers who are already doing excellent work bringing African American research into the classroom and drawing from their expertise.
• Mr. McCoy suggested improving the pipeline for teachers of color to bring more African American mentors and teacher into Virginia’s classrooms.
Ms. Howell pointed to the need for reflection and a constant assessment of personal biases is an important aspect of preparing teachers to work with all students. Training should also be ongoing – educators should not expect just to work on it once and then move on.

How might we improve African American history in general?
- Mr. Cole agreed with the focus the Commission has made on improving history Pre-K through 12, so that it is not just a topic covered for one year or in one class.
- Ms. Foster pointed to the possibility of making African American history its own certification.
- Several panel members spoke of how the community aspect of education contributes to a sense of history. One example of this is the negative connotations Black students will feel if they attend a school named for a Confederate general.

Can you provide a few more ideas about what can be done to ensure that teachers have the adequate content knowledge to teach African American history?
- Ms. Brown suggested communication and collaboration with parents.
- Ms. Bryant recommended that the structure and weight of high school courses should be a consideration. Even if a school is offering an African American history course, if it is not an attractive class for students to take in terms of meeting their degree plans, they may overlook it. Local history must be addressed too because it is especially relevant to the lives and experiences of teachers and students.

What do you think about the notion of oral history as a form of living Black history?
- Mr. McCoy indicated that sharing lived experience is a relevant way for students to explore and connect with history.

Public Comment

Leah Walker facilitated public commentary. Each member was allowed three minutes to speak to provide for a wider range of comments. Members of the public were also invited to submit comments or statements in writing on the Commission’s website. The responses were as follows.
- Ma’asehyahu Isra-Ul, instructional specialist for history and social science for the Richmond Public School system emphasized the value of social studies and history because it has been undervalued over time and public schools across the nation are lessening social studies instruction in favor of improving English and math scores.
- Jemima Davis, living history interpreter, spoke of her vast experience going into schools and teaching about African American history, beginning with African culture. She lamented that the way that African American history is currently taught leaves these students out of their own cultural history.
- Sam Taylor touched on his experience as an author and diversity trainer and spoke to the need to also explore why African American history has not been taught to provide context for why it is so important. It is also important to put cultural and historical tales in context because African American history is both U.S. and world history.
- Charlotte Hayer, RPS teacher, stated that improving teacher capacity will require steps beyond a simple course to help teachers understand the importance of their role in being caring, respectful role models for their students.
- Ingrid Mendoza, social science specialist from Loudoun County, spoke to the need to raise teacher consciousness of white supremacy and how it has negatively impacted the schools.
- Wendy Howard Cooper emphasized lifting up the perspective of Virginia’s children and being aware that the circumstances surrounding a child’s community and upbringing will impact how they learn and connect with history.
- Colleen Eddy, coordinator for social studies for Fairfax County Public Schools, pointed to specific issues with the existing Virginia curriculum framework, including the lack of meaningful and honest attention to American slavery. It is especially problematic that studies of the economic justifications and intricacies of slave labor do not touch on the human and emotional horrors endured by enslaved African Americans.
• Naila Holmes, director of Human and Civil rights with the Virginia Education Association, mentioned the VEA’s work on establishing a dialogue on institutional racism that limits opportunities and prevents students from realizing his or her full potential.

• Tanya Pruett shared that her own history education was not inclusive and spoke to the importance of African American history as a crucial aspect of U.S. history. Making an elective course is not sufficient to address the problem.
Virginia Commission on African American History Education in the Commonwealth

Listening Session Meeting Minutes, March 11, 2020
Norfolk State University
700 Park Avenue, Norfolk, Virginia 23504

Attendees

Present Commission Members: Dr. Cassandra Newby-Alexander, Makya Little, Rodney Jordan, Pat Fisher, Christy Coleman, Renita Williams

Virginia Department of Education Staff: Tori Noles, Jenné Nurse, Christonya Brown, Christine Harris

Student Panel: Faith Handling, Julate Hillman, Myles Hunt, Bryce Marchetti, Jaylen Riddick, Harrington Smith, Charity Warren

Welcome and Overview

Dr. Cassandra Newby-Alexander, Norfolk University professor, dean of the college of liberal arts, and commission co-chair, welcomed all attendees on behalf of both Norfolk State University and the Commission on African American History Education in the Commonwealth. Norfolk State University is an institution that embraces the vital contributions that African Americans have made to the state and nation. All students who graduate are required to take at least one course on African American history, though they may choose the discipline from history itself to fine arts and science. She briefly touched on Norfolk State University’s role in helping conduct the research that shaped the civil rights movement and invited everyone in attendance to visit the university once the COVID-19 situation impacting the United States is under control.

Dr. Newby-Alexander also explained the Commission’s charge: that Governor Ralph Northam established the Commission to deliver a report that looked at the Standards of Learning in Virginia to pinpoint what can be fixed immediately, and how they could be changed in the long term to promote inclusion of African American history. The Commission also must write on broader considerations about how history in the commonwealth can be shaped to promote a more contextualized, accurate and inclusive view of the United States. The third main charge is to issue recommendations for professional development to improve the teaching and learning of African American contributions to history. Additionally, the Commission will make future-facing recommendations about Virginia’s standards as a whole.

Tori Noles, special assistant to Virginia’s Secretary of Education, brought greetings from Secretary Atif Qarni and Chief Diversity Officer Janice Underwood. She thanked the commission for their work and reiterated that the department is there to help in any way it can.

Jenne Nurse, equity coordinator at the Virginia Department of Education, brought greetings from the State Superintendent and the Department itself before highlighting the work that educators and the public have done in previous listening sessions by participating in panels. The panels have consisted of teachers, office staff, parents and community advocates. The panel convened at Norfolk was comprised of students, who are equally vital voices to provide feedback on education and African American history in the commonwealth.

Student Panel

The student panel was moderated by Dr. Newby-Alexander and included:
- Faith Handling, Norfolk Public Schools
- Julate Hillman, Virginia Beach Public Schools
- Miles Hunt, Portsmouth Public Schools
- Bryce Marchetti, Chesapeake Public Schools
- Jaylen Riddick, Chesapeake Public Schools
- Harrington Smith, Virginia Beach Public Schools
- Charity Warren, Norfolk Public Schools
The panel’s format mostly involved moderator Dr. Newby-Alexander asking specific students questions based on information the students had shared about their experiences in school before the panel. Other students were able to comment if they had something they wanted to add.

How have you been personally affected by the way African American history is taught?
Students were invited to answer this question to give their perspectives on African American history during their experiences in Virginia’s public schools. General points included the following:

- Students have been affected by how it is not taught – that they have not really been taught much about African American history during their time in school.
- One student commented that the only African American historical figures they were taught during school were “the big four”: Martin Luther King, Jr, Rosa Parks, Jackie Robinson, and George Washington Carver. To get a broader perspective of history, they had to research on their own.
- Another student mentioned that their time in a predominantly African American private school allowed for a much broader look at the contributions of African Americans to U.S. history, but the moment they entered public school, it was minimized.
- African American history was often reduced to small facts learned during Black History Month or names of figures who broke barriers whose names they learned for tests. For one student, it led to a general loss of her sense of self, that history was not something she could personally relate to.
- Another student commented that though there was an African American history class available at their school, it was an elective, so not many students would end up taking it.
- Another student mentioned that his teachers tried to include African American content in their courses, but it was not comprehensive and did not lend a sense of gravity or identity. The exclusion of African American historical content in Virginia’s schools leaves out a vital building block of U.S. history that all students should know.

What considerations should be made to improve the inclusion of African American history instruction?

- African American history is a complex narrative, especially because African Americans in the U.S. have such a mix of cultural and national heritages. Conversations about war and slavery are obviously difficult and will cause potential conflict between students, which is why it is so important to properly arm teachers with the knowledge and skills they need to moderate these discussions and give a thoughtful, broad and inclusive view of U.S. history.
- One student suggested that it might be helpful to dedicate a Standards of Learning (SOL) to African American history, beginning in 1619 when Africans were first brought to the United States and touch on major historical points from there. It is important to not only discuss the conditions of slavery, but also the African Americans who were free and made their own contributions to history. The goal should be for students to have a good understanding of U.S. history, which includes the contributions of African Americans.

Identify current practices in history instruction that could be reconsidered, added or revised as it pertains to African American history.

- There should be a course available to touch specifically on African American history. In U.S. history, instruction should go beyond slavery, the Black renaissance, and the civil rights movement. Students should know what happens between for all of the unique cultures that have contributed to U.S. history.

How can we ensure that teachers are adequately prepared to teach African American history to diverse student populations?

- The first step would be to ensure that all teachers are credentialed for African American history but to also have a candid talk with educators to reiterate that the only way to honestly address U.S. history is to include the darker, violent aspects. They need to be sure they are emotionally prepared and have the strategies to discuss these difficult topics with their students.

Do you have suggestions about how to improve teachers’ knowledge and comfort when they are teaching African American history?

- Ideally, a teacher that has sought out or taken African American history. Beyond that, the educator should be comfortable in his or her own cultural and historical background and extended that comfort the more difficult parts of U.S. history.
Teachers being prepared to have difficult conversations goes beyond professional development and credentials. Learning history should be ongoing and holistic, and educators should present historical content to their students in a way that allows them to emotionally grasp the gravity of it rather than sticking to the drier aspects.

What would you do to improve African American history education?
- Diversification is important. Students learn in different ways, so history education should be well-rounded. It should not only focus on the past but also the present and implications for the future. History has depth and students should feel its importance in everything that they do as they learn and grow as individuals.

Would including local history into the curriculum help engage students?
- One student mentioned living near Old Point Comfort on Fort Monroe, where the first enslaved African Americans were brought to the United States in 1619. The history there is local, personal and deeply relevant to the United States. Local history is also relevant in terms of community figures who had parts to play in shaping American history.
- Conversations about important events and people that begin in the classrooms should also go home, where students can talk to their parents about what they can share regarding local landmarks and figures.
- Being able to visualize history through what students can discover locally could appeal to them and keep them engaged because it is something they can see and interact with. Being more knowledgeable about how events have shaped their cities and communities will also allow students to be more civic-minded and better informed.

Final Comments:
- Hosting panels of stakeholders open for public comment is vital to the Commission’s work because it allows for collaboration. Moving toward a more inclusive view of history and academics in public schools goes beyond the department of education and requires students, teachers, administrators, families and community stakeholders be part of the conversation.
- Teachers should be passionate about what they teach. Content so important should not just be a checklist for tests or curriculum. History should be personal, innovative and engaging.
- Connecting the history of African Americans in the United States to the current successes that the nation enjoys is vital. The fight for a quality education at the local and state levels should be clear to students and families so that they know the importance of properly funding schools and preparing students and future teachers.
- The narrative surrounded African American history needs to go beyond the notion that they are just survivors. They are innovators, creators, entrepreneurs.

Public Comment

The public comments section included attendees submitting their comments by number, with three minutes to speak. Comments also were welcomed to be submitted online in their entirety. Briefly, the recorded comments included the following.

- The first speaker, a French teacher, mentioned their petition to boycott World History I and II because it does not teach fully factual, contextualized history beyond what is said to have been solely built by Europeans and primarily white nations. Educators need to do better and give a wider, more inclusive look at history and the contributions of African Americans.

- Brother Kim, from the Association for African American Life and History (ASALH), mentioned that the disconnect between what students are taught, their identities, and the full truth of African American contributions comes down to how it is taught. The ASALH offers its services to assist with professional development in how to prepare teachers to include African American content across disciplines and the curriculum.

- One commenter pointed to a lack of engagement with content that leads to students not seeking out or learning more about history. From early grades, they need a glimpse of how what they are learning fits into the broader picture and how it is personal to them.
One commenter introduced several points relating to African American history to potentially enrich the curriculum, from mathematician Katherine Johnson to the Dallas Act. Once the speaker began attending college, the desire to discover what they did not learn in high school concerning African American history inspired them to do research on their own, and the effect is an empowering knowledge of personal and cultural history that all students should experience while in primary and secondary school.

African American history is American history. Racism is an integral driver of policy and struggle that African Americans in the United States have fought to overcome, but it is not often discussed in the classroom. It is important to address these realities and to broaden the field of teaching to include and incentivize more minority educators. As the state grows more diverse, so too should the teachers.

A currently employed English teacher reiterated that a multidisciplinary approach is ideal for engaging students with African American history in all their subjects.

The final speaker emphasized that the history of America has been rooted in fiction more than fact. Classes should bring in elements of the history of all races and cultures that have helped form the United States, but African American contributions were a vital component for building the nation itself. Slavery helped propel the success of states like Virginia and perpetuated injustice, but it also was home to the underground railroad and efforts by African Americans to assert their freedom.

Portuguese sailors captured African men and women from what is present-day Angola. The legal status of these early African men and women as either servants or enslaved persons once they arrived in Virginia is unknown.
Africans arrived in Virginia against their will in 1619.
The first Africans who were forcibly brought to Old Point Comfort were originally free people who were captured by Portuguese soldiers by hired mercenaries in an Angolian region of West Central Africa.
With the forced arrival of these Africans Virginia would create a system of people treated as property based on their skin color.
The arrival of Africans made it possible to expand the tobacco economy. The Virginia Colony's economy was greatly dependent upon temporary and permanent servitude. 90% of the Virginia population were in some form of servitude.
In these early years, Virginia would create a disparity between English colonists and Africans.
The arrival of additional English women in 1620 made it possible for more settlers to start families, which helped to establish Jamestown as a permanent colony in Virginia. |

The Virginia colony became dependent on slave labor, and this dependence lasted a long time. | The Virginia Colony turned to enslaved labor to make money and expand their resources. This dependence lasted for more than two hundred years, until the end of the Civil War. For this reason, African men, women, and children were forcibly brought to the Virginia colony and enslaved to work on the plantations. The Virginia colony became dependent on slave labor, and this dependence lasted a long time. |
| VS.4e    | Most enslaved African Americans worked tobacco, other crops, and livestock. | Most enslaved Africans worked tobacco, other crops, livestock, in industries including shipping, construction, and other trades. Africans came to America with prior knowledge of skilled trade. |

- Slavery
  o While there were several differences between the North and the South, the issues related to slavery increasingly divided the nation and led to the Civil War.
  o Much of America’s economy revolved around the institution of slavery.
- Cultural issues
  o The North was mainly an urban society in which people held jobs in cities.
  o The South was primarily an agricultural society in which people lived in small villages and on farms and plantations.
  o Because of their cultural differences, people of the North and South found it difficult to agree on social and political issues.

- Slavery
  o While there were several differences between the North and the South, the issues related to slavery increasingly divided the nation and led to the Civil War.
  o Much of America’s economy revolved around the institution of slavery.
  o Slavery was growing larger, stronger, and more powerful in each decade after 1800.
  o By 1860, nearly four million Americans lived in perpetual bondage.
- Cultural issues
  o The North and the South shared a culture of Protestant Christianity, political beliefs based on the Constitution, and ideals of personal property. The North was mainly an urban society in which people held jobs in cities.
  o A culture of reform grew in the North, fed by the Second Great Awakening, aspirations of social improvement, activist women, and charismatic reformers. The South was primarily an agricultural society in which people lived in small villages and on farms and plantations.
  o Because of their cultural differences, people of the North and South found it difficult to agree on social and political issues.
  o In the South, white people argued that the Bible sanctioned slavery and that slaveholders acted as Christian protectors of enslaved people
  o Black southerners saw themselves as a people held in bondage like the Israelites in the Bible and had faith they would one day be delivered from slavery.
- Economic issues
  o The North was more of a manufacturing region, and its people favored tariffs that protected factory owners and workers from foreign competition.
  o The South was largely agricultural. Southerners opposed tariffs that would cause prices of manufactured goods to increase. Planters were also concerned that Great Britain might stop buying cotton from the South if tariffs were added.
  o In both the North and the South, most people were farmers
  o About a fourth of white Southern families owned enslaved people and grew wealthy from their labor. |

- Constitutional issues
- A major conflict was states’ rights versus strong central government.
- Political Issues
- Voters in the North and the South belonged to the same political parties from the 1820s through the 1850s: Democrats and Whigs.
- The two parties found ways for the divergent interests of the North and South to be compromised.
- The emergence of the Republican Party in the late 1850s gave voice to Northerners angry at Southern dominance of the federal government out of proportion to white population.
- These political differences, fed by the invention of the telegraph and the spread of newspapers, led the South to secede.

| 2. Public Comment | • In addition to the regular channels of communication, provide outreach to specific groups to collect regional feedback from divisions, family and students, educators, community groups, and regional educator representatives.
  • Create a survey to collect feedback. |
| 3. Educator Committees | • Educators are convened to review and revise the Standards based on content knowledge, expertise, experience, and geographic location.
  • Groups should include but not limited to: at least one regional representative for each grade/course and recommendations from division superintendent.
  • Expand group from 30 to make sure range of expertise is represented. |
| 4. External Committees | • Expand members of the External Group to include members from various backgrounds, experiences, expertise, and geographic location.
  • Expand group from 40 to make sure range of expertise is represented.
  • Group should include, but is not limited to: Institutions of higher education (IHE) for pedagogy, IHE and historians for accuracy, museums for cultural needs. |
| 5. Steering Committee | • Create a Steering Committee made up of members from the Educator and External Committees to review all of the feedback.
  • Steering Committee includes all regions and various backgrounds and expertise. |
| 6. VDOE Review | • Virginia Department of Education (VDOE) leadership reviews and provides feedback on the proposed revisions. |
| 7. Virginia State Board of Education Review | • The proposed revised Standards are taken to the VBOE for first review. |
8. Public Comments and Hearings
*Outreach

- In addition to the regular channels of communication, provide outreach to specific groups to collect regional feedback from divisions, family and students, educators, community groups, and regional educator representatives.

9. Standards Review

- Standards are reviewed and revised again based on public comments and feedback from hearings

10. Final Review

- The proposed revised Standards are taken to the VBOE for final review.
- The Board approves Standards or postpones for additional review and/or revisions.

11. Curriculum Framework

- Repeat process for the Curriculum Framework.
- Gear Curriculum Framework towards deeper thinking to support performance tasks and assessments.

12. Resources
*Expand

- After the Curriculum Framework is completed, bring together the steering committee to brainstorm resources including an enhanced scope and sequence document.
- As the resources are revised, the African American History elective course will be reviewed & updated.

13. Textbooks

- VDOE Leadership and VBOE determine next steps for textbooks.
- Since history continually changes and evolves, explore if there is an alternative way to deliver current content to support more robust instruction.

14. Ongoing

- Include members from the steering committee, educators, and division equity coordinators to support on going resources and professional development including: cultural proficiency, resources and elective course.
